Life of the Desert: Water's Vital Role

Guest Author: Alexia Smith, Outreach Instructional Specialist, Arizona Project WET

In the arid landscape of Arizona, water is not just a resource, it's a lifeline. The desert's sparse water sources, such as rivers, springs, and man-made reservoirs, are essential for the survival of both human and animal populations. Arizona's wildlife, from the elusive mountain lion to the tiny elf owl, depend on these water sources to thrive in a harsh environment.
